Getting Started on Your Business Plan

If your business plan were to have exactly the impact you want it to have, what would that look like? Describe it:

What’s your vision for your business?

What “business purpose” do you want your business plan to accomplish (if not already stated above)?

Choose a time horizon for your business plan.

What do you need to do to get organized?

How will you involve other people in your company?
The Seven Centers of Management Attention™

The E-Myth Worldwide™ business success model demonstrates how key areas of business are interrelated. This model facilitates the strategic thinking necessary to work on your business, not just in it.

Leadership: Develop your vision for your business
The core center that provides the direction and purpose for the entire business.

Marketing: Understand your best customers
The research and analysis of your customers that identifies who they are, where they are, and why they buy from you.

Money: Establish, track and maintain predictable cash flow
The financial side of your company. Controlling the movement of money within the business and creating the company’s financial value.

Management: Assemble and motivate the right team
The way in which you manage people, systems and resources. Encompasses the infrastructure and culture of your company.

Lead Generation: Create awareness in your target market
The way in which you attract customers to your products and services.

Lead Conversion: Create a predictable sales system
The conversion of leads into customers. Encompasses sales and the enrollment of clients.

Delivering on the promises made in Lead Generation and Lead Conversion.

Building Change into Your Business Plan

One of the most effective, yet most often neglected, ways of building change into your business plan is by identifying and then monitoring the assumptions that went into it. This worksheet will help you do just that. Make copies of the worksheet before you begin.

In the columns below, list your planning assumptions, the parts of your business plan that are affected by each assumption, and the indicators to watch over time that will tell you if your assumptions are correct. Then select the date when you will review those indicators to see if your assumptions are on track. At the time of your review, determine whether you need to re-assess those portions of your business plan.

If you do want to change your plan at that time, use the preceding Business Development Plan worksheet to identify each item, who will be accountable for revising it, and the due date.
